

rain

When the sun shines on the earth's surfaces, some of the water is absorbed by the air, creating water vapor.

When the air has absorbed its maximum amount of vapor, if the air is cooled, some of the vapor will condense and clouds will form. When it rains, the clouds release the water.